Dear Bob:

Your letter of January 28 was waiting here for me when I returned from the Far East. I had pleasant chats with mutual friends there and heard some comments on your stop-over in Taiwan on your recent return from Australia.

We are really counting on your lecture to provide the big wind-up for our speaker program this year, and I am looking forward to some moments to talk with you. I hate to put pressure on you, but at this particular time of the year, the weather and airplane travel are sufficiently uncertain that I would urge strongly trying to make that 11:40 A.M. Eastern Airlines flight. We will have, I feel sure, a good audience waiting for you, and I would hate to see the program ruined by a late flight. (It often happens on Eastern). Could you please let me know the name of the man who knew you at Harvard and asked you to speak at the Kiwanis Club. I will see that he is invited to the dinner we will have together right before your talk.

My wife and I will count on your spending the night with us. That will give you an opportunity for some serious conversation after the turmoil and shouting has died.

Best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

Richard L. Walker
